UK Outlook for Monday 22 Feb 2021 to Wednesday 3 Mar 2021:
Following a brief drier interlude, aside from some showers in the far northwest, a resumption of mild and often unsettled weather arriving on a strong southwesterly wind is expected. Northwestern areas, especially higher ground, will see the wettest conditions, often accompanied by strong winds and coastal gales. Drier conditions are likely further east and southeast, although still some rain at times. By the end of February and into early March, conditions across much of the UK are most likely to turn more settled as high pressure becomes dominant, although confidence in this is low; indeed the northwest in particular could see a continuation of spells of wind and rain. Temperatures are likely to be mild or very mild across the UK, with a trend towards average in early March.
